Humiliation

When you seek out success in your life,
At times, you stand on the edge of the knife,
Cause they are against you with lousy intention,
And all you receive from them is humiliation

When they are aghast you'd surpass them,
And that dazzling success of yours would petrify them,
When their monopoly would be shun,
What you will face is humiliation

When they look forth and find no choice
They try to make you feel void.
They scorn you in every situation,
And what you face is humiliation

When they are afraid they might taste defeat,
Cause their success is dirty and yours is neat,
When "no one is better" is their notion,
What you will face is humiliation.

When you feel abased beyond your toleration,
Remember that they are drops, you the ocean.
Even your 'haters' and 'rivals' believe at your success,
So cut down the humiliation which is excess

When they make you feel you are worthless,
Head straight and tell them at their face:
"You believe in me and so do I,
You are petrified by this existence of mine.

You can't crumble me with or without help,
Because nothing can defeat me, but my very own self!
This is the proof of me being invincible,
And you are the proof of me being inevitable."
